Utilizing innovative teaching, coaching and administrative approaches, the Ruth S. Ammon School of Education now offers a sport-based youth development specialization through its M.A. in Physical Education and M.S. in Sport Management degrees. Through experiential education courses, students design, implement and evaluate sport-based youth development programs, and gain experience in fundraising and grant writing with community partners. Coordinated by Meredith Whitley, Ph.D., the 12-credit specialization can be completed in one year and includes a service-learning course, two hybrid courses and one field-based internship.

This specialization prepares students for leadership positions in nonprofit organizations, school systems, sport camps and athletic leagues in the U.S. and around the world. It is designed especially for:

- Administrators
- Coaches
- Recreation leaders
- Teachers
- Youth development workers
- Community leaders
